

WHITE DWARFS AS ASTROPARTICLE PHYSICS LABORATORIES

J. Isern¹, S. Catalán², S. Torres³, M. Salaris⁴, E. García-Berro³

¹*Institute for Space Sciences (CSIC-IEEC), Barcelona* ²*University of Hertfordshire, Hatfield* ³*Departament de Física Aplicada (UPC) & IEEC, Barcelona* ⁴*Astrophysics Research Institute, Liverpool John Moores University, Liverpool*

The bright branch of the white dwarf luminosity function is only sensitive to the average cooling rate in this region. This property allows to test the viability of new ideas in Physics like the existence of axions or the production of micro black-holes from high energy collisions. In this contribution we discuss the present uncertainties and the robustness of the method.